A Paris paper has the following remarks about a banquet to be given Narvaez:

"It is the whim of a vizier. Seven hundred persons are invited, and the cost of the feast is reckoned at 1,000 ounces of gold, or 90,000 francs (£3,500.) He must have millions to indulge in such largesses; and Narvaez has them. Yet he possessed but his sword's scabbard when he returned to Spain; no inheritance has devolved to him, and he has won no lottery prize; yet he has bought and paid for in eash a chateau worth 600,000 francs; he has above a million in a Paris firm which I could name, and he spends 90,000 francs on a dinner. You see by these facts to what an extent robbery is organized here. From the highest to the lowest they are robbing everywhere, and there is nothing to be compared with this frantic dilapidation.
